About Rett Syndrome

Children with Rett Syndrome appear to develop “normally” for the first six to eighteen months after birth, then enter into a degenerative stage of the disease. The child rapidly begins to lose their speech; and ability to communicate verbally is replaced with the use of their beautiful penetrating eyes. Many children that once were able to crawl or walk find themselves unable to perform these functions. Purposeful hand use is lost as well and replaced with repetitive movements; the girls can no longer feed themselves or even hold onto their favorite toy. Additional symptoms that define the syndrome include; digestive difficulties, breathing abnormalities, seizures and severe scoliosis. It is a life of pain, frustration, and total dependence. Rett syndrome occurs spontaneously in approximately 1 in every 10,000 female births. There is no treatment or cure...yet. Several clinical drug trials give hope to relieve some symptoms of RTT. It is now reasonable to expect some improvements for nearly all, which will significantly enrich their lives.

Your help is our hope. Thank you!

About NJ Rett Syndrome Association (NJRSA)

NJRSA is a NJ 501(C)3 organization established in 2007 to contribute towards an improved quality of life for girls and women affected by Rett syndrome in the New Jersey area, raise awareness and funds for research. By raising awareness, we foster public attitudes conducive to early diagnosis, treatment, support and research of Rett syndrome.
